EFFECT OF THE IOWA COURT DECISION.

It is reported that in the case of the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Railway against the Railway Commissioners of the State of Iowa to restrain the State from enforcing unreasonable rates for the transportation of freight and passengers the State Court holds that it has jurisdiction, and makes its temporary injunction permanent. This decision was anticipated, because the rates established by the Commission were only a new method of confiscating property. Now the stockholders of some of the Western railroads are applying to the courts for an order restraining the managers from operating the roads in the interest of the general public by reducing rates on a parity basis, and thereby tempting State authorities to attempt to make permanent rates which were made with the intent only of being temporary, or for a period long enough to cover a profitable turn in the stock market.
